Backstory: Rory Hedgehill serves Willie Butterbur, the owner and proprietor of The Prancing Pony Inn at Bree. He is quite an accomplished cook, specializing in creating dishes for the Hobbit patrons at the Inn. He would much rather be a customer, however, and can often be found enjoying a fine ale (or three) with those he is supposed to serve (much to Willie's annoyance). He is a great friend of Harry Milkvine, a young farmer's son from south of town. He is again going to desert his employer Willie and "go of atraipsin' with them rangers." Willie truly cares for Rory, and wishes he would stay. He has threatened to fire him if he comes back dead. Rory just wants to go have some fun with Harry and with Tom, who is such a fun Big Person, and sings great songs!

Description: Rory is a bit tall for a Hobbit (over 4 and a half feet tall!), and winsome according to the lasses. A bright shock of yellow hair tumbles around his face, which is marked by dark brown eyes and boyish freckles. Like all Hobbits, he's a bit pudgy around the middle, but is still young (in his 'tweens) and hasn't developed the respectable rotundity of his elders. The quick flash of his smile and a witty comment are often remembered fondly by folks who meet him.
